Neudorff's new sustainability report

Neudorff is proud to publish its latest sustainability report – making it one of the few medium-sized companies in the green sector to do so in recent years. The current version of the digital “Magazine for Sustainability 2020” can be found online at www.neudorff.co.uk/sustainability. The report is based on the 17 goals for sustainable development defined by the United Nations.

Sustainability is in Neudorff's DNA. The manufacturer of environmentally friendly plant care products has been working assiduously for many years to become increasingly sustainable in all areas of the company. Part of this process has been to define goals and conduct regular reviews on what has already been achieved. The current Magazine for Sustainability informs employees, customers, suppliers and other stakeholders on the company's activities, its vision and ongoing goals.

A summary of the Neudorff Sustainability report includes the company's medium-term goal is to lower its own CO<sub>2</sub> footprint, as well as continuing to protect resources by committing to increasing the amount of raw materials it uses that are of a domestic, or even regional, origin. The report also outlines how Neudorff has also already achieved climate-neutral production at all its facilities through the generation of its own green energy and, where applicable, will continue to offset unavoidable emissions with climate protection certificates. Elsewhere, Neudorff highlights its use of hydropower, photovoltaics and combined heat and power to generate the energy it uses in its manufacturing process, with the report also outlining the company's ongoing conversion of its company vehicle fleet to electromobility.

Additionally, the company takes its responsibilities as an employer very seriously and within the Sustainability report explains more about this, including how each year it provides a training programme for young people, employing, on average, two thirds of them. As a company driven by equality, the report also showcases the proportion of women in managerial positions at Neudorff, which currently stands at 35%; 7% higher than the German average according to Statista*.
